Shackleton Describes the Misfortunes Which Overtook His Expedition.

LONDON, June 2 .- A long dispatch om Lieut, Sir Ernest Shackleton, who as arrived at Port Stanley, Falkland describes the misfortunes which overtook his antarctic expedition. His ship Endurance was pierced by icebergs and sank in the Weddell sea November 20, having been abandoned by all hands October 27.

Shackleton and his crew reached Elephant Island April 14 in boats after series of privations and sufferings n the drift ice, several of the party being then on the verge of physical

Owing to the seriousness of the food situation and the impossionity of inding any very satisfactory camping place on the bleak coast, Shackieton decided to make an effort to reach south Georgia, 760 miles distant, leaving the main party on Elepnant Is-land in charge of Frank wild, the Fortnight of Struggles.

Lieut. Shackleton left April 24 with ave volunteers. Then ensued a fortnight of terrible struggles against blizzards and other difficulties, but finally the west coast of South Georgia was sighted. After a mighty effort, was sighted. After a mighty effort, lasting two days, they succeeded in beaching their boat, and rour days later arrived safety at the head of king haaken bay, may 19 they started across the island, reaching the Stromhess whaling station may 1-9. There they obtained an eight-ton Norwegian whaler for an attempt to reheve the men left behind.

The whater started south with a volume to the started south with a volume.

The whater started south with a vol-The whater started south with a volunteer crew May 26, but they found the ice too formidable for an unprotected boat and after several attempts reluctantly decided to turn north for assistance to the Falklands.

The members of the party on the beach at Elephant Island were all well when Shackleton left April 24. They had a week's provisions, with the possibility of reinforcing these by the capture of seals.

Results Enumerated.

The work of the expedition to date, says Lieut. Shackleton, includes the discovery of 200 miles of new coast line, a complete hydrological survey of the Weddell sea, the elimination of south Greenland from the map, continuous magnetic and meterological observations, important biological observations, cinema records to October 30 and photographic records up to date.

As far as is known, not a single man of the expedition lost his life, but the anxiety will not be at an end until all the men now marooned in the southpolar regions have been accounted for. Lieut. Shackleton's story is a marrative of conquest by sheer courage and en-durance of difficulties as nearly insurmountable as ever a similar expedition mountable as ever a similar expedition encountered.

All of the morning papers publish the story of the expedition in full with the exception of the Morning Post. The Post devotes two paragraphs to an account of the expedition, and in an editorial denounces the undertaking as ill advised in wartime.

Nation's Life at Stake.

"A nation fighting for its life," says the editorial, "has other things to absorb its thoughts and energies than discovery, and when we remember all that is now at stake on the battlefields of Europe we cannot affect more than relief that the news from the Facklands

"No doubt in other times it would have been thrilling to read all that has befallen Shackleton and his devoted company at the south pole. It is impossible today, however, not to reflect on all that might have befallen this country and that has been so narrowly averted while the Shackleton expedition has been locked helplessly in the antarctic ice floes."
